REDACTED VERSION OF DOCUMENT SOUGHT TO BE SEALEDI. INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

On January 25, 2016, over a year after this litigation first began, four months after the amendment deadline, and just days after submitting a jointly-negotiated Amended Scheduling Order to the Court for approval, Defendant Arista Networks, Inc. (“Arista”) filed a motion for leave to add antitrust counterclaims against Plaintiff Cisco Systems, Inc. (“Cisco”) (Dkt. 163). As Arista admits, the motion is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16 because it comes long after the Courts’ deadline to amend any pleadings. Rule 16(b)(4) states that “[a] schedule may be modified only for good cause and with the judge’s consent.” “Good cause” primarily comes down to the movant’s diligence in complying with the schedule, although prejudice to the non-movant is an independently sufficient basis to deny motion. Arista was not diligent here, and its request would severely prejudice Cisco.

Arista’s counterclaims assert two basic liability theories against Cisco: that it committed an allegedly anticompetitive “about face” with respect to the intellectual property covering its command-line interface (“CLI”) for Ethernet switching products, and that it supposedly “bundled” its SMARTnet service with Cisco products in an anticompetitive way.¹ Although Arista halfheartedly claims that it was only able to recently comprehend these counterclaims, that is demonstrably untrue. The alleged “about face” about which Arista complains began, at the latest, when Cisco filed this lawsuit in December 2014. And Cisco’s SMARTnet service and pricing plans have long been used in the market; even longer than this lawsuit.

Because the parties are long past the amendment deadline, Arista’s motion is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16, which requires that the movant establish “good cause” for their late request. As noted above, “good cause” in the Rule 16 context focuses on the movant’s diligence in pursuing the basis for their amendment. Arista cannot make such a showing here. It

¹ Arista also alleges that Cisco committed unspecific “intimidation tactics” against consumers in the marketplace, but does not provide details about those “tactics” and, in any event, notes they were intimately related to the above alleged schemes. If and when necessary, Cisco will respond to the substance of these claims, but notes for now that they are spurious, unsubstantiated, and immaterial to the current motion.

1 not only sat on the facts underlying its proposed counterclaims for years, but the majority of the 2 few documents it cites in the proposed counterclaims were produced well before the amendment 3 deadline. More troubling, Arista also actively participated in negotiating and submitting the 4 currently-operative Amended Scheduling Order with apparent full knowledge that it intended to 5 seek this relief only days after the Court entered the new schedule the parties jointly proposed.
6 Under applicable law, this lack of diligence is the end of the inquiry.

7 But even if Arista's failure to diligently pursue the amendment were not dispositive, the 8 prejudice Cisco would suffer if the Court grants the motion is severe. Since the beginning of this 9 case, Cisco has consistently emphasized its need to move expeditiously due to the severe and 10 ongoing harm caused by Arista's copyright and patent infringement. As the Court has noted, any 11 claims brought in this case will be tried together, and the current trial dates beginning in 12 November 2016 are insufficient to handle both Cisco's intellectual property claims and Arista's 13 proposed antitrust counterclaims. The next trial dates the Court has available begin in February 14 2018, a year and a half later. Given that this case is already more than a year old and involves 15 allegations that Arista has and continues to slavishly copy Cisco's intellectual property (and 16 thereby gain ill-gotten sales in the market), such an additional delay is clearly prejudicial because 17 it threatens—and seems explicitly designed—to derail or unreasonably slow down the resolution 18 of Cisco's pending copyright and patent infringement claims. This is particularly problematic 19 given Arista's failure to abide by its diligence obligations.

20 For these reasons, Cisco respectfully requests that the Court deny Arista's motion and 21 require it to file its antitrust claims, if at all, in a separate action. Arista has effectively conceded 22 that is the proper course, as it noted in its motion that it is perfectly willing to conduct a separate 23 trial on its antitrust claims (if they proceed that far), governed by separate discovery deadlines and 24 a separate schedule. Cisco agrees, so long as those claims proceed separately (although it is 25 willing, for efficiency purposes, to use overlapping discovery from this case wherever 26 appropriate).

1 II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2 On December 5, 2014, Cisco filed this lawsuit against Arista due to the latter's blatant and 3 extensive copying of Cisco's copyrighted and patented CLI. The complaint explicitly noted the 4 various pieces of intellectual property Cisco believes it owns and that Arista infringed. (See 5 generally Dkt. 1 at ¶¶ 6, 24-39, 51-57.) In the fourteen months since, the parties have briefed a 6 motion to dismiss, coordinated on an initial Joint Case Management Statement (which included a 7 preliminary discovery plan), produced millions of pages of documents, conducted numerous 8 depositions, and appeared before the Court multiple times. More recently, they negotiated an 9 extension to the discovery schedule after the Court pushed back the trial date by several months at 10 Arista's urging, and submitted Amended Scheduling Orders to the Court on January 14 and 19, 11 2016. (Dkts. 156 & 159.) Throughout that entire negotiation process, Arista never indicated (until 12 it filed the present motion) that it intended to add any antitrust counterclaims to this case.

13 When the parties negotiated the initial case schedule, the Court required them to amend 14 their pleadings and claims, if at all, by September 7, 2015. (Dkt. 51.) Arista never objected to this 15 deadline, nor did it ever seek to move the deadline in any way. Even when the parties negotiated 16 the more recent Amended Scheduling Order—including after the attorneys who now apparently 17 will run the antitrust claims filed appearances in this case in November 2015, (see Dkts. 104 & 18 105)—Arista never indicated that it wished to move back or otherwise alter the date for amending 19 pleadings. Meanwhile, the parties continued to conduct discovery according to the originally-20 contemplated scope of the claims and defenses.

21 At the recent January 28, 2016 Case Management Conference, the Court indicated that it 22 would not conduct two separate trials in a single case. (Dkt. 179 (Jan. 28, 2016 Hr'g Tr.) at 13:18-23 20.) Practically speaking, that means the Court would need to move back the November 21, 2016 24 trial date on Cisco's copyright and patent infringement claims until at least February 2018 (a year 25 and a half later), all in order to accommodate counterclaims Arista never mentioned until the last 26 instant. (Id. at 14:8-9.)

27 This delay is particularly problematic because, regardless of the liability theory alleged, 28 Arista does not indicate how it was at all diligent in seeking to comply with the Court's

1 amendment deadline. The proposed counterclaims are based on old facts long known to Arista, 2 and Arista identifies no reason why it was unable to bring these claims earlier in the case. (See 3 generally Mot.)

4 For example, Arista accuses Cisco of committing a supposed “about face” regarding 5 intellectual property that Cisco allegedly committed to the public domain. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 33.) That 6 “about face” included Cisco’s assertion that it owned and could exclude its competitors from using 7 its CLI. (Id. ¶ 30-32.) According to Arista’s explicit allegations in the counterclaims, Cisco’s 8 anticompetitive scheme included copyright and patent assertions over its CLI; i.e., this lawsuit.
 9 (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 91 (“One of the ways Cisco carried out its policy reversal was to announce 10 to the industry that it claimed copyright infringement from Arista’s use of 514 CLI
 11 commands...and in contrast to its years of representations, Cisco even sought injunctive relief 12 against the use of those commands.”). Moreover, the first time Arista made such an allegation 13 was in its February 13, 2015 Answer to Cisco’s original Complaint in this lawsuit. (See Dkt. 36, 14 at 1 (“Until December 2014, Cisco never suggested that it claimed copyright protection in the set 15 of functional commands that most of the industry uses.”).

16 Similarly, Arista accuses Cisco of antitrust violations relating to its SMARTnet service 17 pricing, but neither alleges that it was unaware of SMARTnet pricing until only recently, or that 18 the SMARTnet service just recently came into being. (See Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 97-109.) In truth, 19 SMARTnet has been around for the better part of a decade [REDACTED]

23 III. LEGAL STANDARD

24 As Arista concedes (because it must), Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16 governs this 25 motion, because it comes long after the Court’s deadline for amendments to the pleadings. See 26 Mot. at 3; see also Zamora v. City of San Francisco, 2013 WL 4529553, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 26, 27 2013) (finding that Rule 16’s more stringent rules govern attempts to amend “after the deadline set 28 forth in a court’s scheduling order”); Pierce v. Sprouts Café, Inc., 2010 WL 3069312, at *1 (E.D.

1 Cal. Aug. 3, 2010) (“Once the Court has entered a pretrial scheduling order, the standards of Rule
 2 16 rather than Rule 15 govern amendment of the pleadings.”). Arista’s vague citations to Rule 15
 3 (Mot. at 3-4) thus have no application here. See Johnson v. Mammoth Recreations, Inc., 975 F.2d 4 604, 610 (9th Cir. 1992) (“Disregard of the [scheduling] order would undermine the court’s ability 5 to control its docket, disrupt the agreed-upon course of the litigation, and reward the indolent and 6 the cavalier. Rule 16 was drafted to prevent this situation and its standards may not be short-7 circuited by an appeal to those of Rule 15.”).

8 Rule 16 requires that a movant establish “good cause” for their requested amendment to 9 the scheduling order. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4) (“A schedule may be modified only for good 10 cause and with the judge’s consent.”). Unlike Rule 15(a)’s liberal policy toward amendment, 11 “which focuses on the bad faith of the party seeking to interpose an amendment and the prejudice 12 to the opposing party,” Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609, Rule 16’s “good cause” standard “primarily 13 considers the diligence of the party seeking amendment.” Id.; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. advisory 14 committee’s notes (1983 amendments). “If the moving party was not diligent, the inquiry should 15 end.” Kuschner v. Nationwide Credit, Inc., 256 F.R.D. 684, 687 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (emphasis 16 added) (citing Zivkovic v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 302 F.3d 1080, 1087 (9th Cir. 2002)). A party can 17 show good cause by establishing:

18 (1) that [it] was diligent in assisting the court in creating a workable Rule 16 19 order; (2) that [its] noncompliance with a Rule 16 deadline occurred or will not 20 occur, notwithstanding [its] diligent efforts to comply, because of the 21 development of matters which could not have been reasonably foreseen or anticipated at the time of the Rule 16 scheduling conference; and (3) that [it] was diligent in seeking amendment of the Rule 16 order, once it became apparent that [it] could not comply with the order.

 26 finding of diligence and offers no reason for a grant of relief.” Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609 27 (collecting citations).

If the movant is able to establish diligence, prejudice to the non-movant is an additional, independently sufficient—although not necessary—reason to deny the Rule 16 motion. See id. (noting that the degree and existence of prejudice to the non-movant may provide additional reasons to deny the motion, but that prejudice is secondary to the diligence inquiry). Prejudice is a case-specific question, but it includes (among other things) delay to the trial, see, e.g., Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Renz, 2010 WL 2867615, at *3 (N.D. Cal. July 20, 2010) (denying motion to amend under Rule 15’s more lenient standard because it would delay the trial and thus prejudice the parties); Harris v. Vector Mktg. Corp., 2009 WL 3710696, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 4, 2009) (same, where proposed amendment would “derail the Court’s scheduling order”), and delay caused by additional discovery. See Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 194 F.3d 980, 986 (9th Cir. 1999); Harris, 2009 WL 3710696, at *2.

For the reasons discussed below, Arista satisfies neither of these stringent requirements.²

IV. ARGUMENT

Arista utterly fails to establish its diligence in bringing the current motion, which alone necessitates denial. However, given the motion’s timing, and in light of the Court’s trial schedule, the motion also severely prejudices Cisco in this now year-old intellectual property theft dispute.

A. Arista Was Not Diligent

As noted above, the primary basis on which Arista asserts its counterclaims are two fact patterns that were not only reasonably foreseeable, but were actually known and apparent to Arista for years. The first is the supposed “about face” Cisco made with respect to its CLI intellectual property. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 33.) According to Arista, Cisco for years effectively committed its intellectual property to the public domain and then only made an about face with respect to that intellectual property once it was faced with competition from Arista. (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 25-31.) Putting aside for the moment that this is a fabrication and refuted in ² Although Arista’s antitrust claims are also futile, that is a question under Rule 15 and thus not at issue here. When and if appropriate, Cisco will address the futility—i.e., implausibility and meritless nature—of Arista’s claims in a proper motion to dismiss.

multiple, diverse ways by Arista's own witnesses and documents in this case, the factual predicate underlying Arista's claim is that, by asserting intellectual property rights over its CLI, Cisco somehow committed an antitrust violation. (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 111-112, 150.)³

Even assuming that could somehow be true, there is a clear point in time at which the basis for such a claim should have been readily apparent: December 5, 2014. That is the date Cisco filed this copyright and patent infringement lawsuit against Arista, and is the date on which Cisco made abundantly clear that it would not permit Arista to infringe its CLI intellectual property. (See, e.g., Dkt. 1 ¶¶ 42-44, 50-54, Prayer for Relief ¶ 4.) Arista does not claim that it was unaware of these facts, nor could it because Cisco's assertion of copyright ownership and its pursuit of injunctive relief related to Arista's copyright infringement is one of the core bases for the counterclaims. (See Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 91 ("One of the ways Cisco carried out its policy reversal was to announce to the industry that it claimed copyright infringement from Arista's use of 514 CLI commands...and in contrast to its years of representations, Cisco even sought injunctive relief against the use of those commands.")). Moreover, although Arista uses documents obtained during discovery in this case to bolster its allegations, (Dkt. 162-6 at Exs. A-H), the vast majority of those were produced to Arista long before its motion and most before the deadline for amendments to the pleadings. (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 at Exs. A, C, D, F (produced in related proceedings between Cisco and Arista before the ITC, and in this matter on July 21, 2015); and at Exs. E and H (produced in related ITC proceedings, and in this matter on September 25, 2015). And, in any event, Arista first alleged the supposed "about face" in February 2015, when it answered Cisco's initial Complaint in this action. (See Dkt. 36, at 1 ("Until December 2014, Cisco never suggested

³ In response to this point, Arista may cite certain of its proposed counterclaim allegations aimed at circumventing the inevitable problems that arise when a plaintiff alleges antitrust violations from an intellectual property holder asserting that property in the market. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 130-31); cf. Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 929-30 (9th Cir. 2006) (noting that invocations of intellectual property rights are typically immunized from the antitrust laws under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and that these protections extend to pre-litigation assertions of intellectual property ownership and infringement). Cisco will address these allegations at the proper point, but they cannot avoid the simple conclusion that this very lawsuit is a core example of the allegedly "improper" intellectual property assertions of which Arista complains.

1 that it claimed copyright protection in the set of functional commands that most of the industry 2 uses.”).

3 Thus, even if Arista had been somehow unaware during multiple litigations with Cisco that 4 the latter was asserting intellectual property rights over its CLI, it had more than ample 5 opportunity to seek to add the “about face” counterclaim before the Court’s scheduled deadline.

6 Moving to the other primary liability theory—Cisco’s alleged “bundling” of SMARTnet
7 with Cisco switches—Arista never claims that it was unaware of the allegedly anticompetitive 8 bundling activity before the amendment deadline. The bundling allegations simply identify a 9 service that Cisco provides to its customers and claim that Cisco’s pricing methodology for that 10 service somehow forecloses competition. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 33-39.) Arista does not claim that this is 11 a new practice or that it is premised on “new” facts Arista just learned, nor does it identify any 12 efforts to diligently pursue this liability theory before the Rule 16 deadline. (Id.) Moreover, 13 Arista cites no documents from discovery in this case for its bundling theory, further failing to 14 explain why it just now brings the claim. [REDACTED]

15 [REDACTED] See Cannon Decl., Ex. A.

16 For these reasons, Arista completely fails to establish that it was diligent in pursuing the 17 newly-proposed claims. This is unsurprising given that, over one year before it brought its 18 motion, Arista was aware of the core facts underlying at least its CLI-related antitrust claims.
19 Such unexplained delay is the antithesis of diligence and is alone a reason to deny the motion. See 20 Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609 (“If [moving] party was not diligent, the inquiry should end.”); Rodarte 21 v. Alameda Cty., 2015 WL 5440788, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 15, 2015) (finding plaintiff was not 22 diligent in pursuing amendment where, even accepting argument that the need to amend became 23 clear at only summary judgment, Plaintiff delayed in seeking amendment for an unexplained 24 additional two months).

25 This, however, is not where Arista’s lack of diligence ends. Arista must also show that it 26 was diligent in “assisting the court in creating a workable Rule 16 order,” and that 27 “notwithstanding its diligent efforts to comply, because of the development of matters which 28 could not have been reasonably foreseen or anticipated at the time of the Rule 16 scheduling conference.” Jackson, 186 F.R.D. at 608. The parties recently spent weeks negotiating an Amended Scheduling Order in this case. They then presented that Amended Scheduling Order to the Court for approval, which, after some follow up regarding the Daubert hearing and related dates, the Court granted. (Dkt. 160.)

Not once during the discussions over the Amended Scheduling Order did Arista’s lawyers ever mention that they might want to bring antitrust counterclaims. (Dkts. 156 (Joint Stipulation Amending Scheduling Order, dated January 14, 2016) & 159 (Joint Stipulation Amending Scheduling Order, dated January 19, 2016).) Yet, only six days following the Court’s entry of that Order, Arista suddenly sought leave to file a 153-paragraph, 55-page antitrust complaint that those same lawyers admit will greatly expand the scope of discovery. (Mot. at 1, dated January 25, 2016.) Arista cannot seriously claim that it was unable to put Cisco and the Court on notice earlier that it might bring these claims, particularly because its antitrust lawyers appeared in the case two months earlier, in November of last year. (See Dkts. 104 & 105; see also Mot. at 5 (noting that Arista retained antitrust counsel in November 2015).)⁴ Nor is there any good explanation for why Arista remained silent on the amendment issue while negotiating—at length—an Amended Scheduling Order for the broader case. This, again, is the opposite of diligence. See Integrated Storage Consulting Servs., Inc. v. NetApp, Inc., 2014 WL 6816907, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 3, 2014) (“[N]ot only must parties participate from the outset in creating a workable Rule 16 scheduling order but they must also diligently attempt to adhere to that schedule throughout the subsequent course of the litigation.”).

B. Amending the Case Schedule Now Would Prejudice Cisco

Rule 16 places so much emphasis on diligence because unjustifiably late requests to amend a case schedule create massive inefficiencies and disruption. See Johnson, 975 F.2d at 610. But,

⁴ Notably, Arista claims that it located the documents cited in its counterclaims in November. (Mot. at 5.) It does not similarly claim that it first learned the facts set forth in the counterclaims in November. (Id.) Nor could it, for the reasons discussed above.

1 as previously noted, prejudice in the face of diligence still acts as an additional, independent basis
2 to deny a Rule 16 motion. Id. at 609.

3 Here, the parties are scheduled to begin trial on Cisco's affirmative claims on November 4 21, 2016, less than ten months from now. The parties have scheduled two weeks to address 5 Cisco's claims and expect that they will need to use all of that time to adequately present their 6 respective cases. (Dkt. 106 (11/5/2015 Hr'g Tr.) at 27:3-14.) They are currently in the midst of 7 heavy discovery, only some of which Arista believes overlaps with its new counterclaims. (See 8 Mot. at 1 ("Discovery into Arista's antitrust claims will overlap to some extent with discovery into 9 Cisco's copyright infringement claims, but the antitrust claims will also involve independent 10 discovery...").

11 Notably, the current trial date is the second such date the Court set in this case, having 12 continued the first at Arista's request due to its assertion that it needed to conduct further 13 discovery. (Dkt. 132.) At the time the Court did so, it provided the date in consultation with both 14 parties and then asked them to work out the details for the extended discovery schedule. (See Dkt.
15 145 (Dec. 3, 2015 Hr'g Tr.) at 56-62.) But the Court also did so by noting that moving the date by 16 only a few weeks would likely yield very little prejudice, whereas a year and a half delay would be 17 something altogether different. (Id. at 42:15:21.) Arista neither indicated to the Court nor Cisco 18 at that time (or before filing this motion) that it would need to conduct antitrust-related discovery 19 on the new schedule, despite that it had already retained antitrust counsel in November (see Mot.
20 at 5). Nor did it indicate that it would need to try antitrust counterclaims alongside Cisco's 21 affirmative intellectual property infringement claims. (See Dkts. 93, 108, 127.)

22 Shortly after Arista filed this motion, the parties held a Case Management Conference 23 before the Court on January 28, 2016. At that time, the Court noted that it would not be inclined 24 to separately try Cisco's affirmative claims and Arista's requested counterclaims, and that the 25 counterclaims would drastically increase the complexity of the overall dispute. (Jan. 28, 2016 26 Hr'g Tr. at 13:11-22.) Because of this, the current trial schedule would be insufficient, because 27 the Court has not reserved an adequate amount of time to resolve a dispute of that breadth. (Id.)
28 Furthermore, the Court is unable to schedule a new trial date long enough to accommodate both

1 sets of claims until at least February 2018, (id. at 14:8-15), which would delay Cisco's day in 2 court by at least a year and a half, and this in a case where the trial date has already been pushed 3 back due to Arista's efforts.

4 Given the clarity the Court provided on how the amendment would affect the case
 5 schedule, one of the primary bases on which Arista bases its motion—the supposed lack of delay 6 caused by the requested amendment, (see Mot. at 1-2 (“Consequently, Arista's motion will not 7 prejudice Cisco, nor delay the trial of this action.”) (emphasis added))—is fundamentally 8 incorrect. As such, even on Arista's own logic, Cisco would be severely prejudiced if the Court
 9 granted the motion. See Renz, 2010 WL 2867615, at *3 (delay of trial constituted prejudice 10 sufficient to deny motion to amend); Harris, 2009 WL 3710696, at *2 (same, where proposed 11 amendment would “derail the Court's scheduling order”); cf. also Dkt. 145 at 42:15-21 (noting 12 that, unlike a year and a half delay, a delay of a matter of weeks would cause little prejudice).
 13 Even had Arista been at all diligent with seeking amendment, this provides an independent and 14 equally compelling reason to deny the motion.

15 V. CONCLUSION

16 For all of the above reasons, Cisco respectfully requests that the Court deny Arista's 17 motion for leave and require it to file its antitrust claims, if at all, in a separate lawsuit.

18 DATED: February 8, 2015
